NEW Two Year Postdoctoral Fellowship Program in Maternal and Child Health Epidemiology

The UC Berkeley School of Public Health MCH Epidemiology Postdoctoral training program will provide postdoctoral fellows with a transdisciplinary perspective that includes advanced training in MCH and Epidemiology, as well as in skills needed for transitioning to academic faculty and research leadership positions.

Fellows will be selected to address key national research priorities, including health disparities, ACA implementation and changes in health outcomes; issues of children with special health care needs; healthy weight and nutrition; adolescent health; and disparities in maternal and infant mortality and morbidity. The fellows will be provided with a list of potential data sets and approaches to data linkage that allow for research that examines population health more broadly in California and have the opportunity to become involved in projects utilizing existing data to provide an evidence base for MCH policy and programs. The Fellowship experience will include exceptional mentoring and professional development.

Requirements include a doctoral degree in public health, epidemiology, or equivalent training with substantive knowledge of the science and programs relating to maternal, child and adolescent health. Candidates must possess strong quantitative skills, English writing and verbal skills, and an interdisciplinary orientation. Commitment to MCAH populations in California is preferred.

UC Berkeley SPH is committed to creating a diverse learning community. Individuals from underrepresented backgrounds are encouraged to apply. Applications will be accepted until a qualified applicant pool is identified. Positions are available immediately and start date will be negotiated with successful applicants. This Fellowship program has grant funding support from the Maternal Child Health Bureau Centers of Excellence in Maternal and Child Health in Education, Science and Practice, PI Dr. Cheri Pies, Post Doctoral Program Director Dr. Brenda Eskenazi.
